Becoming Champions of Change: 2011 Managing Projects, Programs & Portfolios Conference

As people trickled into the room it began to fill with anticipation. Would this conference be like any other? Will it be different? Slowly we filed in, found the bounty of fruit, baked goods, juice and coffee set out for breakfast and took our seats. After Chapter President, Steve Thornton welcomed us; a presentation by Michael Dawson from Oracle opened our minds. Michael spoke about how mobile devices are changing our lives and how they need to be both mobile and simple. After Michael's presentation, Melissa Endicott, a representative from Portland State University School of Extended Studies showed us what courses are available.

The Keynote Speaker, Tres Roeder, presented on the topic, "Effectively Leading Change Through People". Tres spoke about his early days as a project manager, fresh from taking the PMP certification test. Using the PMBOK as his guide, he attempted to apply all the processes, tools and techniques to the outputs outlined in the book. Through extensive project experience, he realized that PEOPLE are integral to project success. He found that to effectively manage a project, you need a balance of technical, interpersonal and conceptual skills. In this new era of project management, Tres redefined project managers as "people management professionals" who must embrace their "Sixth Sense." He defined this "sense" as

Steve Thornton, Chapter President

"I received the most value from presentations by Tres Roeder and Kathi Kroop. Both speakers addressed leadership skills and provided tactics to implement change and increase self-awareness. I will be able to apply what I learned to a 2-year project in need of escalated assessment."

six disciplines: Awareness, Whole Body Decisions, Clear Communications, Adaptability, Diplomacy, and Persistence. He ended by encouraging each of us to tap into these facets of ourselves and become experts in changing people's behavior and in turn improve project success.

Presenters Doc Dochterman & Tim Runcie, from Advisicon

"I most appreciate the 'soft skills' presentations. The information provided in them reminds us to step back from the pure logistics side of project management and think more about personal attitudes and team dynamics. When you stay focused on the fact that projects require people, you are able to evaluate situations more fully and miss fewer opportunities for success."

Robin McCaffrey, PE
Engineering Project Manager
Port of Portland

With this consequential information in our minds, we learned in the next sessions how to be "Champions of Change" in the four tracks to follow: Leadership, Soft Skills, Career Management or Project Management Tools and Trends. Attendees could select all the presentations in one track or intermingle all four tracks. There were 16 presentations in all, each with a speaker(s) with expertise in their topic. During every presentation break, I overheard people discussing what information was offered and how it would apply to their particular job or situation. It was refreshing to hear exchanges of analysis, applications and information about among my fellow project management professionals.

The conference was scheduled in such a way so that learning opportunities were regularly available. During the lunch break, Michael Dawson from Oracle showed how to capture data at the source to increase efficiency. After him, Pete Bright representing Cadence, addressed responding to businesses urgency through program / project management paths.

Tim Runcie and Doc Dochtermann from Advisicon discussed the differences between portfolio (doing the right things) and project (doing things right) management along with briefings of the current data and tracking software tools available. During the session breaks there were opportunities to visit the exhibitor's areas, to meet and become better acquainted with our sponsors and find out what products and services they provide to support the Project Management community. Throughout the event, there was ample time to interact with colleagues, meet with old acquaintances and make new ones.

"The conference was an excellent opportunity to learn about a myriad of critical content applicable to professional project managers. I was impressed by the quality of the speakers and I really enjoyed the opportunities to network with other strong project managers. Thank you to PMI Portland for organizing a relevant and well-organized event."

This conference would not be possible without our sponsors and volunteers. If you would like to be a part of next years conference, please contact our Director of Volunteers, Saby Waraich.

As you can see from the quotes and photos within this article, this conference met, if not exceeded, the expectations of the 200+ attendees. These participants would agree that this conference provided new knowledge and spurred innovative thinking not only in project management, but also in their daily lives.

"The Portland PMI team really delivered the promised value at their recent Managing Projects, Programs, and Portfolios Conference. I was equally impressed with the quality of the speakers, venue, and the food. Thanks for inviting me to be a part of this incredible event."

September Chapter Meeting Keynote Presentation

Enterprise Information Resource Management Strategy

The 2010-2015 EIRMS Roadmap Fulfillment analysis was led by the Department of Administrative Services (DAS)—Enterprise Information Strategy and Policy Division on behalf of the agencies of Oregon state government. Join Ben Berry as he discusses Earned Business Value and Risk Assessment as used to measure and analyze current states of EIRM goals and strategies plus set the context for defining detailed next steps to complete each strategy.

This update occurs at a time of ongoing challenges to citizens and our state government services upon which they rely. The document updates progress on the original goals for strengthening the multi-agency governance framework strategy to address the full range of challenges. It delivers recommendations for completing work already underway to optimize overall cost, effectiveness and efficiency of information resources. It calculates earned business value for each strategy while highlighting progress and observations since launching the EIRMS in January 2010.

For each strategy's remaining earned business value, we examine risk, chart the current and forecast critical path, and offer recommendations to ensure the goals are achieved. The EIRM strategy provides a roadmap for strengthening, optimizing and innovating the management of Oregon's information resources.

About the Presenter

Ben Berry is an Enterprise Master Change Facilitator for the State of Oregon. Previously, he served as Oregon Department of Transportation's (ODOT) Chief Information Officer providing overall leadership, planning, development and delivery of information technology services for ODOT and several other non-transportation organizations. As CIO for the second largest state agency in Oregon, Mr. Berry was responsible for systems supporting highways, bridges, rail service, right-of-way determinations, DMV and Motor Carrier commercial trucking inspections and licensing throughout the state.

Berry is the former Chief Technology Officer of Providence Health System Oregon, supporting seven hospitals and 33 clinics. He has held executive and management positions in state and local government, healthcare, telecom, aerospace/defense and airport transportation.

Berry received his M.B.A. from UCLA and a B.S. in Life Science—Biotech from the University of Portland. He has 30+ years' experience in computer software program management and operations, applications development and design, and systems development in the public, private and not-for-profit sectors of the U.S. and the Middle-East. He has facilitated business process and systems integration improvement for automotive, aerospace, international airports, Royal Saudi Air Force, healthcare and government entities.

Berry is an inventor and visionary. Outside of his government roots, he is building the AirShip VTOL Transformer transport vehicle and electric vehicle maglev drive-trains for ground transit vehicles. He challenges his team to build vehicles that can average over 100 mpg fuel efficiency with its equivalent in maglev electric regeneration to travel over 100 mph.

Berry has been commended for visionary leadership, strategic initiatives and execution: NASCIO 2010 Recognition Awards Program for Outstanding Achievement in the Field of Information Technology and 5th placement nationwide of USA Transportation DOT's, ITSMF's Summit Heritage Leadership Award for 2010 for extraordinary contributions to the advancement of technology and diversity in our industry; Computerworld's Premier 100 IT Leaders for 2008; 2007 Oregon IT Executive of the Year, Society of Information Management and InnoTech; Governor Kitzhaber's Award for "Investing in People and New Technology."

Professional Development Workshops

Project Dynamics When Working With Passive Aggressive Behaviors

Thursday, October 6, 2011
8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Have any of the following ever happened to you? You've conducted a meeting where agreements were reached or a course of action was determined, yet within 24 hours, someone has taken a different course or does not adhere to what was agreed? Or, you've had a stakeholder agree with you in a one-on-one meeting only to find them supporting a contrary view at the stakeholder meeting? Or, you find a note hanging on the work refrigerator in the break area or some other conspicuous place indicating a desire for a change in behavior or venting frustration? If you have experienced any of these, then you have experienced a few examples of passive aggressive behavior. This type of interaction is seldom seen as a positive or productive element in your business workflow. Without careful management, productivity can be critically affected and relationships can be destroyed.

Attend this workshop and you will learn how to recognize and handle multiple forms of Passive Aggressive Behavior. Better yet, this workshop will teach you how to deal with passive aggressive behavior before it affects your project.

Attendees will learn:

- How to identify passive aggressive behavior
- Tactics/examples of this behavior
- Triggers for this behavior
- Effects of this behavior
- Personality traits that lend themselves to passive aggressive behavior
- Tips for dealing with passive aggressive behavior
- Tips for dealing with a passive aggressive boss

- Conflict resolution and negotiating techniques to overcome aggressive behaviors
- How to take this lesson back to your environment and deal with a current situation

About the Presenter

Presented by Rachel L. Paulson, PMP and President and Founder of Global M4 Consulting, Inc., a consulting and training company focused on delivering business and IT results through mentoring leaders, PMs and others responsible for project success.

Professional Development Workshops

Change Leadership—Change Should Not be Painful!

Thursday, November 9, 2011

At this workshop, you will learn some primary drivers of conflict during change and a process to develop a strategy to address this conflict. We will discuss some different organizational structures and projects goals, as well as how these drivers may integrate to create conflict during the change in the organization.

Attendees will learn:

- A better overall understanding of managing change on the project by leveraging the stakeholders and their influence on the organization.
- Steps necessary to assess the culture and stakeholders to develop a strategy for change, as well as a plan to execute.
- Case studies and exercises to reinforce the outcomes.

About the Presenter

Presented by Steven Brook, Market Leader and Practice Director for Point B in Portland. Point B is an employee-owned management consulting firm that provides objective leadership, deep expertise and transforms strategies into reality.

Prior to Point B, Steve held management positions at Emerald Solutions, the Nautilus Group, Fiserv, Cingular, and US Bank. Steve received his MBA from Lake Forest Graduate School of Management and a BS from Purdue University. Steve is also an adjunct Professor at Portland State University and the Keller Graduate School of Management.

Locally, Steve serves as board member on the Portland Children's Museum, Social Venture Partners Portland and the Urban League of Portland, and has been a past board member with the Project Management Institute.

PMI–Agile Certified Practitioner Workshop

January 2012

Looking for Interesting Projects to Profile

Have you recently closed on a project in the Portland area that other PMI Portland Chapter members might be interested in hearing about? We are looking for stories about local projects. You don't even need to do the writing. We will interview you and capture the fascinating details that describe your methods, approach, outcomes and lessons learned. Final copy will be published in the PMI Portland Chapter newsletter.

Please let us know you are interested by sending a short note to newsletter_dir@pmi-portland.org.

A Program is Not a Project on Steroids

Failure to Satisfy

Large, complicated projects frequently fail to satisfy their customers. Because of their size and complexity, they must coordinate multiple related streams of project work, all of which must be successful at just the right time in order to deliver the complete solution that the customer needs. For example, consider a project to create a new product such as a next-generation tablet computer. This new product must tie together elements as diverse as hardware and software, new services, customer support, custom integration for corporate customers, and channel development. Failure to coordinate all of these elements into an integrated solution means failing to satisfy customers and generate sufficient revenue.

Failure to coordinate causes internal damage, too. Projects working at cross-purposes cause chaos within the performing organization, wasting scarce resources and time. They can lead to a fragmented product line or enterprise architecture, thus driving up long-term inventory, development, and support costs.

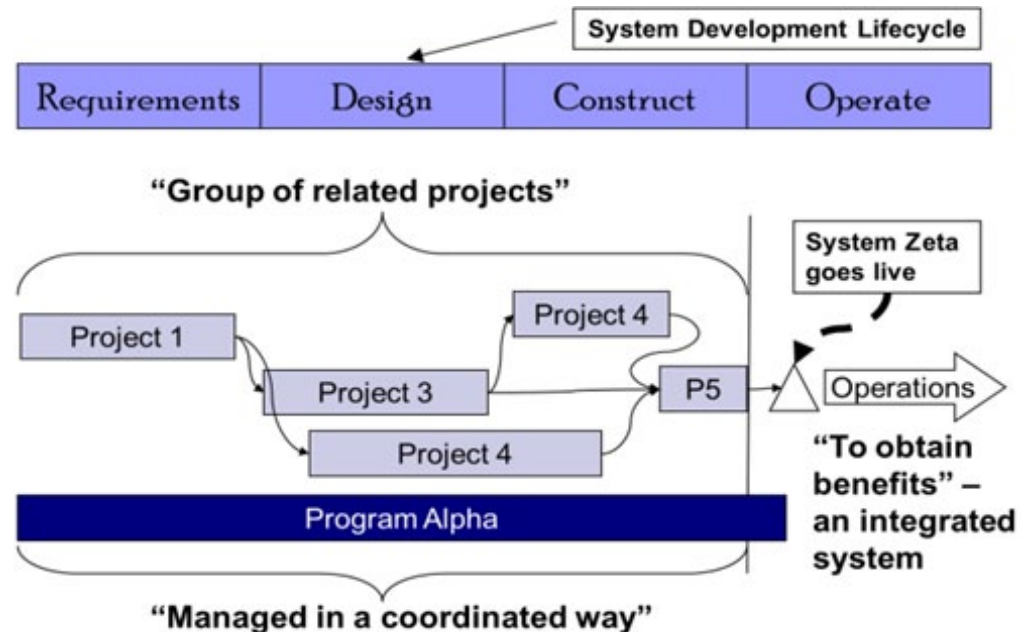

Separate, uncoordinated projects can't overcome these challenges, but a program can. A program is an integrated method to manage a group of related projects, thus obtaining business benefits that would be impossible if they were managed independently.

Creating a Symphony

A program is not merely a project on steroids. It is more like a conductor leading an orchestra. Just as the players in the orchestra play the necessary notes, the projects integrated by a program do most of the real work. But without a conductor, the music created by a collection of independent players would not coalesce into a grand symphony. Similarly, without a program a collection of independent projects doesn't work together to create an integrated product or solution.

The first picture illustrates how this works. Program Alpha manages a group of related projects (projects 1 through 5) in a coordinated way to create an integrated result (system or product) Zeta. Zeta, and therefore program Alpha, is not successful unless each project is individually successful and all of them work together. When this happens, the performing organization obtains the benefits of an integrated result, which is the only thing that the customer will buy. Program Alpha doesn't supersede the individual projects—it is an umbrella that coordinates the work of all component projects to create the complete solution.

Working Together

Program management is essential for project-based organizations that do complex project work. Used together with other management techniques, it helps them consistently take business ideas to business results. The second picture shows this.

- Strategic planning aims an organization in the right direction. It establishes high level business objectives that are in line with business opportunities and customer needs.
- Project portfolio management focuses on doing the right projects. It selects the best from a pool of potential projects, aligning them to the high-level business objectives while considering the limited resources and capabilities of the organization.
- Project and program management execute the selected projects. Good project management does projects right, while program management does projects together.

Endpoint

Organizations as diverse as Intel, L-3 Communications, NASA, and Tektronix have found that programs are essential for creating complex, integrated solutions. If uncoordinated projects at your organization deliver only partial solutions to customers, add program management to your toolbox of techniques.

President's Letter

Welcome to the beginning of a new season for the PMI Portland Chapter. For many of us, summer means a hiatus from Chapter dinner meetings, a workshop, and the annual Professional Development event. This year's Managing Projects, Programs, and Portfolios (MP3) event was a great success. The speakers, sponsors, and volunteers put in a maximum effort and deserve our thanks and appreciation!

Each year, the Board of Directors transition in June and spend the summer preparing for the upcoming year. This year's theme is Quality and Sustainability; we are striving to build on the changes made in the last two years and to consistently and predictably deliver the value and connection the membership deserves. We will be making changes to the infrastructure and tools used behind the scenes to manage the Chapter's business, as well as making changes in the way we engage partners, the community, and our volunteers. In the coming months, updates will be provided in the newsletter and at the Chapter meetings.

I am looking forward to this new Board Year, and would love to hear from you about your experience in the Chapter. Please look me up at a Chapter dinner meeting, or email me at president@pmi-portland.org.

Letter from the Newsletter Director

When I found out about the field of project management, I wanted to know more about "what do project managers do?" I went to several people and they recommended I join PMI and volunteer. So I went to the PMI Portland Chapter web site and initially saw a position for a proof reader and thought to myself, "I can do that". I had just finished a job working at a community newspaper where proof-reading was the majority of the work. I found out the job was under Marketing. I met with the VP of Marketing, Dave Molinari, to discuss what tasks and volunteers he needed. He began to list what he needed and I gravitated towards the Newsletter Director.

So here I am, the Newsletter Director with a "project". From my experience at the Community Newspapers, I have interacted with several editors and writers who are adept in making the content appeal to the reader. With the membership's feedback and guidance, I will assist to create a newsletter with information you will want to read.

Some of the ideas I have for the newsletter are to include:

- Book reviews
- News stories of local businesses who use Project Management
- Where to find information about Project Management
- Member biographies

I would appreciate any comments, suggestions or if you would like to volunteer for the newsletter, please contact me at newsletter_dir@pmi-portland.org.

I look forward to hearing from you.
