PMI Portland Connection

October 2011

You've been a PMI Portland Chapter Member for How Long???

As a new member of PMI Portland Chapter, I have found it interesting to see how an organization has evolved. How better to find out about the beginnings of PMI Portland Chapter than to ask those who have been members of the organization for a long period of time. From the membership list, I found the three longest standing members of PMI Portland Chapter. They are Clifford Gray (member since 1976, 35 years), John R. Patton (member since 1983, 28 years) and Jeffrey S. Busch (member since 1986, 25 years). They graciously accepted my invitations to interview them. I found their insight and experience to be not only informative, but also inspiring.

What major differences have you observed in the PMI Portland Chapter organization since you first joined?

Clifford Gray:

- Size: from 15 members to over 1500 today
- Membership backgrounds
- Early years: 75 percent were in construction field
- Today: 80 percent information technology

John Patton:

The Chapter, just like PMI, was heavily construction-oriented. However, the members really cared about project management. I worked for Tektronix at the time, and managed a software organization that was 80% projects. So, the fact that there was a society that focused 100% on projects was interesting.

Jeff Busch:

It has gone from a small networking group of professionals interested in enhancing their PM career to almost a mega-chapter with more than 100+ attendees for dinner meetings.

Why did you join the PMI Portland Chapter?

Clifford Gray:

I attended a national meeting, where I met Rob Breitbarth. We decided Portland needed a PMI chapter. Together we started the Chapter, which became certified. As an aside, I owned the legal rights to use the letters "PMI" for my consulting firm, Project Management International, Inc. I gave PMI National the right to use the same letters in the State of Oregon.

John Patton:

I felt that I could learn from a group that also did projects, even if they were different kinds of projects. Also, some of my professional friends were part of the charter member group and were recruiting me. I wanted to compare my skills with theirs, share stories, get and give advice and contribute to the advancement of the profession.

Jeff Busch:

I was introduced to the organization by a client and then attended a dinner meeting with a guest speaker. I then also met several very interesting people that I had several things in common with.

...How Long???

Why have you continued to be a member of the PMI Portland Chapter?

Clifford Gray:

When I taught project management courses at OSU, I wanted to keep up to date and provide relevant material for the students of the class. I continue to learn and keep in contact with fellow project managers. I enjoy attending some monthly Roundtable meetings.

John Patton:

PMI continued to have an interesting local program. In the same year I joined, I was taking steps to create a training/consulting firm. It would eventually become Cadence, and project management was one of four practice areas that we offered in the beginning. As the years passed, PMI became a very good way to influence the profession through research and publishing with my academic partner at Cal Poly. Then, it became a way to give back through sponsorships and volunteering at the international level, including congresses. Currently, I am on the Board of Directors for the PMI Educational Foundation. I have always been proud to state to my peers that I am a member of the Portland PMI Chapter.

Jeff Busch:

Provides the ability to network, provide expertise and learn from others.

How did you become involved in project management?

Clifford Gray:

I was a business simulation consultant at Boeing and stumbled into project management as it was used there. Interestingly, I came away thinking the concept would never fly. I have spent over 30 years asking myself, "What were you thinking!"

John Patton:

I was an accidental project manager. In my first job after leaving a graduate program at the University of Oregon, I was given the job as the fifth project manager in 8 months on a

Chapter Meeting Registration Information

We need your help ensuring everyone has a smooth, professional registration experience by:

1. Registering online prior to the dinner meeting:
 - Online registration does not close at 10 a.m. Monday—it is open until the end of the Chapter meeting.
 - Online Late Registration Fee ($10) takes effect at 10 a.m. Monday—this is when the venue requires a final count for meals and tables.
2. Or, registering at the meeting the day of the event as a last resort. You will register online at the welcome desk and the late registration fee will be in effect.
3. Treating the volunteers who greet you and make registration possible with respect. They must ensure the Chapter is meeting PCI (payment credit card interface) requirements.
4. Emailing us immediately if there is a problem with registration (registration@pmi-portland.org).

Please use walk-in registration only as a last resort. Register early!

project in deep trouble. It had three months to run. I organized it, finished in two months, and became a supervisor in one of the organizations. After about a year in that department, there was another big problem and they recruited me as the problem solver. That really began a career in fixing projects and organizations. After a dozen years, I felt that the time was right to start a company. Eventually, our project management approach developed into a suite of courses and consulting services. Cadence gave me the ability to engage in fascinating assignments that had very visible, tangible results. And I have been able to visit 40 different countries over the years.

Jeff Busch:

I started my professional career at first as a project engineer and then later as a project manager.

What advice would you give to project managers today?

Clifford Gray:

If you intend to work on projects, be prepared to work on a team. Understand how teams work and be prepared to adapt to the one you work in. Understand the importance of organizational culture and be prepared to manage your project within the boundaries set by the organizational culture.

John Patton:

Get your certification as soon as you can. Then get experience in a wide variety of projects with differing size, risk and complexity. Say "Yes" when offered challenging situations and assignments, and realize that many, many people want you to succeed and will help you if you ask for help. Take each assignment seriously and commit 100% to each one. No matter how hard the project is, when you pull it out, you will be stronger. Never forget that it is a team effort. Make the team members feel appreciated and learn the value of the word "thanks" (stated frequently, sincerely and when merited). Do not lower your professional standards to accommodate sub-par performers; rather, engage them in development activity that matches their mindset and motivation level. Be willing to show your enthusiasm, and much more...

Jeff Busch:

Stick with it and develop the organizational and people skills to truly motivate and inspire teams to achieve success.

Has being a member of the PMI Portland Chapter benefited you or your business? How?

Clifford Gray:

PMI Portland Chapter has given me a professional and social network, providing me access to new ideas and friends. As an author of project management texts, PMI keeps me in touch with new trends being used by practicing PMs. The current text (with Erik Larson), Project Management: The Managerial Process, 5th ed., is published in six languages. Roundtables identify problems and issues project managers are dealing with on a day-to-day basis. Sometimes I write articles dealing with these issues. (e.g., see PM World Today, May and August 2011).

John Patton:

Being a member of PMI has benefited me both personally and in business. There is no way that Cadence or I could do the research that leads to PMI standards. Nor could we engage with enough people during the work year that could get us current and on the leading edge like conferences and volunteer activities do.

Jeff Busch:

Yes. Previously it provided access to many potential new clients and a basis for a professional reference in the field of PM. Today, it still provides the same professional basis and links/networking to PM individuals worldwide.

What is your prediction for the future for PMI Portland Chapter?

Clifford Gray:

I expect PMI Portland to continue to evolve to meet the needs of regional project managers. I still get very excited seeing the enthusiasm of new and old members participating in Chapter activities that promote the project management profession.

John Patton:

The Portland Chapter has been very adept at changing its structure to adjust to growth, and putting together programs that keep its members coming back for more. I hope the Chapter will continue to attend the PMI-sponsored leadership development events and programs, and take the Chapter into the future in an intelligent, purposeful way, always understanding why each step forward and upward is taken. With good leadership, I predict that the PMI Portland Chapter will be an increasingly visible and influential force in the community, and the model for collaboration that other professional groups use as a benchmark. (Remember that PMI Headquarters used the Portland Chapter to experiment with its development and final definition of the Chapter-and-Branch concept.)

Jeff Busch:

I see more subsets of breakfast meetings and gatherings for those that want to more specifically explore PM. It will always be a source for professional development, education and PDUs. For those wanting to provide more, it will be a place for service and volunteering in one's profession.

Newsletter Director*

Dr. Clifford Gray, DBA, Professor Emeritus from Oregon State University, has long been a project management advocate. Cliff taught undergraduate, graduate, and executive development classes. He wrote numerous research and applied management papers and served as a project management consultant to large and small industries. He has published three project management texts. The latest book is Project Management: The Managerial Process, 5th edition, is co-authored with Erik Larson of Oregon State University and is printed in five languages. This text is a careful balance of the technical processes of project management and the socio-cultural environment in which managers operate.

Cliff has been active in the PMI organization for decades; he was one of the founders of the Portland, Oregon Chapter. Cliff also headed a project research study ("International Comparison of Project Organization Structures: Use and Effectiveness") for the International Journal of Project Management.

Jeffrey S. Busch has been a PMI member since 1986, receiving a PMP certification in 1991. As a member of the PMI Portland Chapter, he served as VP of Programs and its President. In 1989, he led one of the original efforts to develop PMP review courses and continues to volunteer for the current PMP courses. He's a charter member of PMI Willamette Valley and is currently serving as its CEO. For PMI GOC, he was a core team lead for the development of the Second Edition of the Construction Extension (2008) and on the Appointee Qualification Subcommittee.

For much of his professional career he helped lead a very successful consulting firm and now provides services as an independent consultant, a senior consultant/trainer for Cadence Management and an adjunct professor at the School of Engineering & Technology Management at PSU.

John Patton founded Cadence in 1983. It was John's vision to be the premier provider of project management training, consulting services, and support tools.

The Cadence mission is connecting people worldwide and transforming businesses through project management. His recent assignments have been focused on an international program of licensing Cadence training to consulting firms in Asia, Latin America and Europe, establishing Cadence's global project team approach to be taught by local seminar leaders in the local language of the country. This network is key to multi-national companies' designs to use a consistent project management methodology worldwide.

John's leadership in the development and dissemination of state-of-the-art project management techniques has established him as one of the industry's leading "change masters." As one seminar attendee put it: "He makes change more comfortable. He supports his answers to questions and the principles he teaches with a wealth of personal experience." John's consulting experience includes assignments on numerous multi-million dollar new product development projects around the world.

John volunteers by making speeches at chapter meetings in Japan Latin America, and Europe as well as USA. He was the first Chair (2006 – 2008) of the Certification Committee for OPM3, and is currently on the Board of Directors for the PMI Education Foundation. Cadence has sponsored nearly all of the global congresses in North America, Latin America, Asia and Europe since they began to have them.

His career has encompassed every aspect of project management, from strategic planning to construction and product introductions. John has held management and staff positions during the past twenty-five years on a variety of international and domestic assignments. John has provided project management training and consulting services to organizations around the world.

Transforming Project Management into Project Leadership

Project Leadership is the essential skill needed for a successful project. Without GOOD leadership, a project will most likely fail. Ironically, leadership is part of each process group, yet the PMBOK barely broaches the subject. So, what is project leadership?

It isn't just about getting your team to successfully complete a project; it's also about conveying a larger strategic vision so the team understands where the project fits into the overall goals and how they contribute to them.

Transforming Project Management into Project Leadership; sounds fairly simple. However, even though we can all recognize good leadership (and bad) when we see it, all too often we do not practice it ourselves. Especially when the fires start! When the heat is on it's easy to revert back to our "management" skills and lose sight of the people and strategic goals. Subsequently, we tend to focus solely on the project rather than continue to lead the team through those stressful times.

Yes, sometimes we must use our management skills. There is a time and a place for everything; however, we should never lose sight of the vision and how the project fits into the overall strategy.

PM is 40% science and 60% art, and unfortunately it's the art portion that is hardest to conquer. Leadership is an art, and without mastering it, project managers will remain "middle management" at best. A few years ago, PMI published an article referencing the "glass ceiling" project managers face, and within the last couple of years the PgMP certification has surfaced which is aligned toward executive type leadership and decision making, so we're moving in the right direction.

During this session, we will bring home the idea that project leadership is not only a key factor in successfully completing projects, but it is also paramount to our professional growth.

About the Presenter

J Hootman, PMP, MS, MPM, MBA is a certified Project Management Professional (PMP) with over 16 years of project management experience in both the military and commercial business. He has managed a vast array of projects and programs including unmanned aerial vehicle field tests, network infrastructure installation, summit planning, software/database development and custom web/software applications. He retired from the Navy in 2005. He last served as the Director of Information Technology for the Joint Unmanned Aerial Vehicle Test and Evaluation Command in Fallon, NV. Other career highlights include serving as Chief Engineer, USS Moosbrugger, and as Naval Liaison to the Office of Military Base Re-alignment and Re-use for the Governor of California. Change Leadership—Change Should Not be Painful!

Thursday, November 9, 2011
8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

At this workshop, you will learn some primary drivers of conflict during change and a process to develop a strategy to address this conflict. We will discuss some different organizational structures and projects goals, as well as how these drivers may integrate to create conflict during the change in the organization.

Attendees will learn:

- A better overall understanding of managing change on the project by leveraging the stakeholders and their influence on the organization.
- Steps necessary to assess the culture and stakeholders to develop a strategy for change, as well as a plan to execute.
- Case studies and exercises to reinforce the outcomes.
- How to take this lesson back to your environment and deal with a current situation

Meet the PMI Portland Chapter Marketing Team

With a membership of over 1500 people, one of the goals of this newsletter is to get our members to know one another better. This month we are featuring the members of the Marketing team.

Dave Molinari, PMP
VP of Marketing

Dave has worked in the high-tech industry for nearly twenty years at companies such as Mentor Graphics, Tektronix, and Intel. For the past 10 years, he has worked in the IT industry at Intel where he managed technical support and software development teams.

Dave also lived and worked for Intel for 5 years in Russia where he ran three major projects that built new organizations and drove them to world-class success.

Dave loves to build organizations, lead people, and fix stubborn problems. Now back in Portland, Project Management has become his primary pursuit professionally.

Scott Ostby, PMP
Director of Marketing Sales

Scott has a diverse background managing distributed teams of application developers as well as orchestrating the sales and marketing effort for the Ukrainian Software Development firm Binartus in North America. His project management experience includes software innovation, construction and marketing projects. Scott is a decorated Navy Veteran and has a Bachelors of Science in Business Management from University of Phoenix. He coaches Cedar Mill Little League and Milltown United Soccer and enjoys spending time with his wife and two children. If you would like to reach a highly targeted Project Management constituency contact Scott for advertising opportunities on the PMI Portland Chapter web site.

Jane Yang
Editorial Director / Social Media
Director

Jane has over five years experience in the energy and utility industry. In this industry, she has been involved in customer service, marketing, environmental management, sustainability and risk and land. Currently, she is a part of operations for NW Natural where she manages a compliance program. Jane has lived in Oregon for ten years, and is originally from Australia. There she was involved in direct marketing and database management for Australia's largest B2B publisher, Reed Business Information.

She is passionate about continuous education and professional development, and is constantly seeking ways to grow and improve in skills, knowledge and experience. She enjoys fixing problems and finding opportunities for process improvement.

Anne Chalmers, PMP Marketing Specialist

Anne is a wood-putty chemist turned engineer who moved to the dark side of product marketing. Most recently, she has worked with Tribes and non-profits to secure funding through federal grants. Anne has provided project management leadership to product development projects in a variety of industries including flat panel display, test and measurement and high-end industrial tools.

Anne recently formalized her project management skills by passing the PMP exam, and has been working as a contract Project Manager for the last two years. Anne is passionate about advocating for abused and neglected children through the Clackamas County CASA program. She has a BA in Chemistry from Portland State University.

Marketing Team

Jani Hansen Webmaster / Newsletter Editor

Jani has been the webmaster and newsletter editor for PMI Portland Chapter since February 2004. She works as an independent contractor specializing in technical writing, technical training and web site maintenance. Her clients have included Mentor Graphics and Xerox, as well as small organizations. After earning her MS in IT, she worked at A-dec and InFocus in technical training before starting her own business. Other work experience runs the gamut from Production Scheduler in a steel mill to Clinic Manager in a County Health Dept. Her work with PMI Portland Chapter is extremely interesting, rewarding and entertaining.

Laura Sakaguchi, CAPM Newsletter Director

Laura has worked in the automotive engineering field for over 22 years applying her design, test and manufacturing experience as a mechanical engineer at NACCO Materials Handling Group and Warn Industries. Throughout the design process she has coordinated and lead many projects to successful completion. From these experiences, she has found her true passion is coordinating and leading projects rather than design work. She is now pursuing a career change into project management and has passed the CAPM certification test. Recently she took a hiatus from engineering and worked at a community newspaper. She wants to use her experience and knowledge of the media industry to enhance the monthly newsletter.

Cheryl Wilson, PMP Art Director

Cheryl Wilson is a project manager specializing in IT and web project management. She has a track record of completing successful projects by leading motivated teams, building effective relationships with stakeholders, organizing methodically, and communicating clearly with all involved. She volunteers as the Art Director with the Marketing Portfolio at the PMI Portland Chapter. Cheryl lives on a lavender & Christmas Tree farm, and is a long standing volunteer on the Board of the Oregon Lavender Association.

Nick Borders, PMP Marketing Director / Social Media Director

Nick's goal is to use technology in a way to solve an organization's needs in an effective way. He finds it most rewarding building positive teams that work efficiently while making work a positive experience in all of our lives. People over process is always the best way.

Nick's consulting company, Arlo Development Consulting is a personal company that has established itself as a leader in technology project management. ADC's business strategy is to assist organizations in their implementation in digital initiatives by researching existing projects and offering solutions towards improvement in development project process and effectiveness. The company's specialty is getting projects restarted and running with measurable returns in performance and efficiency.

Do You Have A Contingency Leadership Plan?

Or Are You Winging It?

I am proud of my project management experience and title of project manager. But I do not rely on that experience or title as I have learned I must consistently evolve and broaden my skills. And while each project builds my tactical side of project management, I realize I must find other avenues to deliberately expand my leadership abilities in order to mitigate the risk of leadership failure. In fact, I titled this article, "Do you Have a Contingency Leadership Plan or Are You Winging It?" because I have noticed that often project managers fail to intentionally consider their own personal leadership plan – let alone act on it. Using a thesaurus, you will find that contingency can stand for eventuality or emergency.

Like most of you, I consider my project contingency plan as possibilities of "what if" events I want to mitigate. I never want to be blindsided with an emergency I never saw coming. And just like my projects, I believe I should have a deliberate contingency plan for honing my leadership skills. After all, passing the PMI exam does not a leader make. And studying the PMBOK does not adequately prepare you for a team of folks unwilling to follow your lead. Face it; the human resources component of project management is not transactional. To be the most effect project manager, you will need to be transformational in your leadership skills.

Ken Blanchard taught me that in order to lead others, you must first learn to lead yourself. To that end, we must come to know firsthand what our true talents are and how we can leverage the strengths embedded in those talents. That said, if I want to effectively lead others, I must first master the art of self-leadership. In order to accomplish that, I have to plan. There, "I said it". I have to purposely plan my leadership development if I want to continue to grow.

If I were to take a poll of those reading this article, how many of you would admit you have a written leadership plan identifying skills you want to build upon and strategies you want to learn? Further, how many of you have taken a leadership seminar, webinar, or class in the last three months regardless of whether or not you received a PDU? If you have not, when was the last time you focused your efforts towards learning something new about leadership that you could apply to your project management expertise? Here's a tougher question: are you waiting for someone else to invest in your development or are you choosing to invest in yourself?

Have you ever wondered about what it is we do as it relates to project management – to be the one in the lead; to be the one responsible for the overall delivery of the project? I learned that what I do as a project manager consists of the following:

- I passionately attack a problem with a solution in mind.
- I deliberately seek a talented team committed to the solution.
- I proactively integrate critical thinking into an analysis of the situation.
- I influence a variety of stakeholders.
- I gain knowledge from lessons learned in order to become better the next time.
- I invite change.
- I invoke change.
- I change.

I, I, I – looks like the I's have it all, eh? If I truly look at this and the responsibility I have to lead others to invite, invoke and actually change, shouldn't I prepare myself to the best of my ability? Would it not be wise for me to outline my own contingency leadership plan by identifying the possible pitfalls I could face on a project and how I might be successful in mitigating them? It seems only logical that if I hold the accountability, I should be held accountable by myself for on-going leadership development.

Leadership Plan?

I am challenging each of you to invest in yourself when it comes to your leadership skills. The PMI Portland Chapter is a great way for you to seek out presentations that will help hone your skills and provide you with new ideas on how to become a better leader. Consider reading a book, attending a seminar/webinar or take a personal assessment to better understand yourself, how you make decisions or how you communicate. Go ahead – build your contingency leadership plan and work your plan. Not only are you worth it, your team and your clients will reap the benefits.

- About PMI Portland

As I was pondering the problems of leadership and teams, I got thinking about the leaders who overlook negative symptoms. Nutritionist Maria Zilke made a fascinating point one day when she said:

“We are very adept in this country at shutting up our symptoms—if we have a headache we take a couple of aspirin, a body ache has us reaching for a bottle of ibuprofen. Acid reflux or GERD is soothed with antacids—and even our red, itchy dry eyes are treated with fake tears! Symptoms are no longer considered to be the body’s way of communicating—they’re conditions that must be relieved so that we can ignore them a while longer.”

As managers and leaders we often do the same thing with our teams. We view symptoms as annoyances to be ignored, wishing they would just go away with an aspirin, rather than seeing them as the insights into exactly what is out of alignment. Far too often and to our detriment, we view common issues—complaining employees, incomplete paperwork, errors in programming, reduced morale, employees showing up late for work—as irritations that simply must be relieved rather than addressed. However, more often than not these common business ailments actually indicate a larger workplace condition needing attention.

As Maria further points out, the problem with ignoring a symptom is that it doesn’t really go away; it just gets louder and more demanding if we fail to address the root cause.

Might the symptoms in your organization or team be warning you of a potential hazard or illness? Perhaps the real issue behind program errors is a communication gap that everyone is too afraid to name, one that leaves people unclear about their objectives and responsibilities.

Could low morale at work be a function of fear that you, as the leader, have the ability to alleviate if only you become conscious the fear exists?

Incomplete paperwork might be less a function of lazy employees and more a function of forms that fail to effectively meet either the needs of the organization or the workflow of the team.

As human beings we are quick to judge, quick to blame, quick to deflect and way too quick to swallow a pill. We go for the quick fix rather than taking the time to address the underlying conditions that give rise to the visible symptoms. As a leader of self or others, take a moment to reconsider these symptoms, or annoyances, that plague you or your organization. Consider the root causes. You may rediscover that your people are awesome, and that just a few simple circumstances or conditions are standing in the way of their greatness.

Sponsor an event

Becoming a PMI Portland Chapter Sponsor is an excellent way to get in front of our 4000+ audience. Sponsorship gives your company a live presence at PMI Portland Chapter events and a visual presence on the web site and in the newsletter. Contact our Director of Sponsor Services at sponsor_programs@pmi-portland.org.

Speak at an event

If you would like to speak at a Chapter meeting contact speaker@pmi-portland.org. If you would like to present a workshop for the PMI Portland Chapter, contact workshop@pmi-portland.org.

Submit an article
